

Hump Day

Wednesdays seem to always start a little on the groggy side. A little coffee, some breakfast and fellowship with the other missionaries and we're ready to go.

Susan talked at a school. Even though the schools are state run and the state religion is Buddhism, we have been free to speak and share the gospel.

Because of the shortage of interpreters, I went to Ginger's church today. We went to a member's house. He had invited his neighbors and employees - 13 total - over for lunch and to hear the gospel. Six people indicated they prayed to receive Christ. What a great way to spread the gospel.

The weather has been good and people have largely been open the gospel. Keep praying!
